Asian family law solicitor

DIN Solicitors specialise in various areas of law. This week our family law solicitor will be discussing frequently asked questions in relation to divorce:

I have been married for less than a year, can I get divorced?

No. The law sets a complete bar on divorce applications where the parties have been married for less than one year. However there is an option of annulment. Contact us for more information regarding annulment.

What are the grounds for divorce?

There is only one ground for divorce – that the marriage has broken down irretrievably (beyond repair).

What can I rely on in support of my divorce?

You can apply for a divorce and base your application on the following 'facts':

- Adultery
- Unreasonable behaviour
- Desertion
- 2 years separation
- 5 years separation

Will I have to go to court?

Undefended divorce proceedings are usually straightforward and can be dealt with by paper with no requirement for either party to attend court. If your partner defends the divorce then it is likely you will have to attend court and we can assist you with this.

What if my spouse simply ignores the paperwork?

We must satisfy the court that we have used all reasonable means to serve the divorce petition on your spouse. There are several ways we can do this. Please contact us for further advice.

How much will it cost me?

The current court fee for filing a divorce application is £410. Our legal fee depends on whether the divorce is defended or undefended and if there is any other work that is likely to arise depending on the circumstances. Please contact us and we will advise you further.
